A few days before the grand opening, she again received word that her best friend had died. Her friend had asked her to take care of her young daughter.

Stella spends the next few weeks learning how to be a mother to a sad little girl, while getting to know Cade, a man who had been hired to care for the small herd of cattle that was kept around for the guests enjoyment. But she also needed to learn to forgive herself for some preconceived ideas that she had caused her mother's death. Will Stella be able to work through her feelings about her parent's deaths, while at the same time accept the love of a good man?
