For nine decades, quantum theory has been troubling physicists. Because most physicists cannot accept the idea that reality can be created by observation, they restrict the application of Quantum Theory only to microscopic objects. But does the conscious observer create the macro reality, too? Are we the cosmic center? Is our individual consciousness enough to manifest our reality? This book will show you how we create this reality, and will describe what other books about manifestation neglect to tell you. It will tell you the extent to which the conscious observer influences the quantum experiment. It will also explore two different interpretations of quantum mechanics: first, the orthodox interpretation and second, the Bohm interpretation. The orthodox interpretation of quantum mechanics displays the probabilistic nature of reality while the Bohm interpretation displays the deterministic nature. Since experts disagree in their interpretations of reality, we may choose our expert.

This book will explain the quantum mystery, which has been troubling physicists for several decades, including the double-slit experiment at the heart of quantum physics. Because the quantum mystery is exhibited in this simplest quantum experiment, it can be comprehended with very little technical background.
