The Snoring of a Thousand Men: Tales of Childhoods in World War II (Old Memories Book 1)

The Snoring of a Thousand Men: Tales of Childhoods in World War II (Old Memories Book 1)

This vivid "living history" recalls thirty varied childhoods during World War Two. It was the snoring of a thousand soldiers, camped on a field after Dunkirk, that terrified Betty. David saw the face of a crew member of a low flying German bomber, as the rear gunner sprayed a burst of fire in front of his schoolmates. Robert, a refugee from Prague, recalls his family's search for a home. Christa remembers gleaning potatoes from the fields near Hamburg. Margaret was four when she was puzzled to hear her uncles in the navy were "missing presumed dead". Alec recalls buses towing braziers to provide coal gas for their engines. June's cousin was born in a Morrison cage. These and many other personal memories tell how children learned the true meaning of War.
