Billionaire and eligible bachelor from New York, Richard Duke-Bronston seemed to be the ideal male: a god among men, a walking powerhouse, an intellectual and an astute businessman. Although, this perfection and this prime example of human evolution roams the earth comfortably, he has been misjudged by others. Despite possessing a tough, masculine exterior lies a man who has been misunderstood and is truly a human whose character is noble, sweet, kind and considerate. He had his entire future planned out. He was the picture of perfect health. He inherited his billions from his father. He had a model fiancée who was a complete knockout and sat on the board of an extremely powerful company. Everything seemed completely fine until his parents die throwing him into an abyss of chaos and disaster from which he can never escape from.

Stressed out, hopeless and close to depression, he is then sent to therapy. He then meets Suzanna who is unlike any other woman that he has ever met. That brief initial encounter overwhelms him and he constantly fights the desire to know and possess this curvy, earthy and charismatic beauty who seems to have mastered the concepts of the mind and the body. She has managed to understand this man from the beginning through an apparent sixth sense. Yet, with each session, he could see her desire from her glances and lingering stares which pierce through his soul. Near the end of therapy, they get closer and closer to satisfying their cravings, but refrain from crossing the line. Both are tempted to dissolve the professional line and enter the zone of complete pleasure and extreme ecstasy. But do they have the will to continuously fight something so strong and powerful?
