Take a perfect vacuum. I'm not talking about a domestic cleaner, a Hoover or a Dyson or anything like that. Not anything man-made. Nothing natural either. Not a black hole. Not even Space itself, but a perfect vacuum where nothing exists.

Nothing will ever exist.

Nothing can exist.

Take this perfect vacuum, multiply it by a million and you're still nowhere near understanding how empty it feels to work in advertising.

That's me. I'm an account director for an advertising agency.

In the 21st Century we are defined by our jobs. And if you think my job is shallow, you should take a look at the rest of me.

The only thing outside of work with any substance is my marriage. But even that relationship has been fake for longer than I can remember. But it's all I've got left.

And then, one day, even that's gone.

What then?

On one level, My Better Half is the story of an everyman trying to make sense of his shallow life, and on another level it's a microcosm of western society.
