Not illustrated. 1808 Excerpt: ...went into a decline that it was impossible to arrest. However, how that Garbutt has renewed its activity, with the prospect of an increase in trade and population, the school will share its prosperity and may retrieve its former glory. The first school house in the village of Mumford was a small frame structure erected in the early twenties. It was located on the west side of William Street nearly opposite the residence of William C. Page. In 1832 a one-story stone structure was erected on the north side of Dakin Street, midway between the present school building and Main Street. At first it consisted of but a single room, afterward it was enlarged and two departments created. It was in this long, low, unpretentious structure, that James B. Covey, Lanklan Catana, Samuel D. Simons, Reuben D. Jones and the late D. D. S. Brown wielded the birchen rod, and piloted their pupils through the mazes of the multiplication table. The pupils yet living who attended school in the old stone house, cherish the memory of their instructors and speak in terms of commendation of the efficiency and thoroughness of their work. Brown became clerk of the County of Monroe and Jones Superintendent of schools of Rochester. None of the teachers in the old stone house are living. Catana died in Wyoming County many years ago. Simons died in California; Brown in Scottsville in 1887; Jones in Rochester in 1904. The present commodious brick school house in Mumford was erected in 1860. The residents of the village claim that the school of the present day is vastly superior to that of the olden time, that with better text books, improved methods of instruction and various new appliances, they are in possession of a school of which any village in the county might justly take pride. Three of ...
